InstaTech Systems.

As of 12th October 2021, John Jomo, the Technical Manager, confirmed that Samuel Kitonga Ndunda worked with them. He further confirmed that the information in the letter provided was accurate. Samuel left the company for greener pastures.

In a recommendation letter dated 12th November 2015 and signed by John Jomo, the CEO, provided a reference for Samuel Kitonga. InstaTech Solutions was a start-up Web-Services development company that specialized in providing hosting, networking and ancillary services to the corporate sector and installation of security systems and also power systems. Overall, John believed that Samuel was skilled, thoughtful and thoroughly professional Information Technology expert and Electronics Engineer.

During the time that Samuel worked with John, he was always impressed by John’s outstanding diligence and his high level of technical expertise. Indeed, John was more satisfied with their working relationship. During this period, John also had the great pleasure of watching him blossom from a junior software developer and design engineer into a fully functioning business-oriented principal software architect who played a primary architect and software management role and major installations on some of their company’s key projects.

Not only was Samuel highly intelligent, he was also very hard-working. He tackled every project associated to him with enthusiasm and competence, He invariably understood exactly what a project was all about from the onset, and how to get it done quickly and effectively. In John’s estimation, Samuel was a true example of the type of employee that every employer would want – accountable and superior, with superior work ethic and a high degree of integrity.

John recommended Samuel Ndunda very highly for any position in the field of IT field that involved complexity and creativity, with high quality requirements. He was an exceptionally bright and hardworking person who would do his very best to do an outstanding job for whomever he worked for.
